FUND COMMENTARY

The first quarter of 2019 marked an impressive rebound for risk assets, as the Federal Reserve (Fed) pivoted from last year's perceived hawkishness, while corporate earnings remained firm. The Fed downgraded its growth and inflation expectations, while increasing its risk assessments due to global headwinds. The Fed's dovish pivot caused interest rates to fall across the curve, creating a supportive environment for risk assets.

Investors cautiously entered the first quarter despite sensing that December's weakness was overdone, exacerbated by poor liquidity at year end. The Fed's pivot gave the broader market comfort, helping drive demand for spread assets. Treasury yields declined throughout most of the quarter led by the front end due to the re-pricing of the Fed outlook. Economic data slowed, as slower global growth, a month long shutdown of the government, and bad weather nation-wide impacted consumer confidence.

The Fund returned 1.34% in the first quarter, compared to 1.22% for the Bloomberg Barclays 1-5 Year U.S. Government Index. The Fund's overweight to mortgage-backed securities generated most of the positive alpha. The Fund's longer duration skew aided performance while curve positioning was a modest detractor.
